

Faculty cutbacks

Professors get squeezed

by William B. Ness

McGill University teaching staff will continue to find their real earnings declining due to the Québec government's pay constraints which rise and fall like a roller coaster.

The Faculties, Academic and Support Services budget is projected to be $134 million this year, a decline of $6 million from last year. This decline is due to provincial government budgetary restraint, which will reduce McGill's provincial grant from $112 to $103 million this year.

McGill University teaching staff is among the groups most severely affected by the budget compression.

According to Professor J. Handa, president of McGill Association of University Teachers (MAUT), teaching staff are currently facing a "roller coaster ride" where wages go up slightly then fall steeply. This is due to a bill passed by the provincial government which bypasses most McGill wage settlements. According to Québec Bill 70, teaching staff are now considered part of the public sector.

Bill 70 permits a choice between only two wage formulae for wage increases — either the "Parizeau" or the "Berubé" plan.

The Parizeau plan, which McGill chose, allowed an increase for all teaching staff. The alternate Berubé plan allowed wage increases only to those making less than $37,000 annually.

According to Handa, McGill selected the Parizeau plan to allow wage increases to professors making more than the Berubé ceiling. The Parizeau wage plan grants a 7.6 percent increase from June 1st until December 1st 1982. After that, wages will be cut by 18.85 percent until March 1983.

After that decrease, salaries will revert to March 1st 1982 levels, except for a slight increase to those professors who make less than $37,000.

According to Handa, negotiations are continuing for a further 2.5 percent cost of living increase and the application of an average 3 percent annual "merit" increase. These increases would amount to a net gain of approximately 6 percent for the period from June to December 1982.

According to Professor Sid Ingerman, however, the merit increase is left to the "University's choice of distribution", whereby some professors may get no merit increase and others may receive the full 6 percent. This distribution method for the merit increase may result in no overall gain for many professors.

Little can be predicted about government wage policies after March 1 1983. At that time, the one year reprieve of the federal-provincial negotiations over Established Program financing, which affects health, welfare and education, ends.

According to Professor W. Watson, wage restraint over the last two years has caused some professors to leave. For students, budgetary compression means that for every two professors who leave, only one is replaced.

The result? — there will be fewer courses offered, larger class sizes in the remaining courses, and possibly a sizable increase in tuition fees.

Council reigns in S. Africa Ctte.

by Arthur Ennis

Wednesday night's meeting of Students' Council was the venue for the unveiling of the new terms of reference for the South Africa Committee (SAC).

The committee, established by Council in the 1979-1980 school year, has been the focal point for students urging the divestment of McGill funds from corporations and banks operating and investing in apartheid South Africa.

The new terms of reference, as laid out in documents submitted to Council, serves to radically alter the form of the committee. It restricts voting rights on the committee to eight members. As council has reserved the right to define who those eight members will be, the new terms of reference will prevent the majority of committee members from being involved in the decision-making process of the committee.

Elise Moser, co-chairperson of the committee under the old terms of reference, considers the restructuring to be a blatantly political move on the part of this year's Executive Committee.

She labels the disenfranchisement of active committee members as, "The most repressive means of censorship."

Citing the lack of support the issue of divestment from South Africa received from the Executive during last year's election, Moser is not surprised by their actions.

She attributes the restructuring of the committee to an agreement between the Executive Committee and the administration.

"They're essentially being paid off to work against divestment. Make no bones about it, they're out to destroy any visible opposition to the administration and the Board of Governors."

In discussions with Vice President External Affairs Benji Trister and Vice President Internal Affairs Bruce Hicks, Moser learned that the committee's integrity is being surrendered for the promise of the administration's cooperation with Society in other areas.

Moser describes the effects of the restructuring on the committee as, "Politicizing us about the way the Executive and the administration really work. A corrupt and dishonourable way of going about things."

She believes that the executive's action is an attempt to frustrate the mandate that SAC has received from the students of the university.

Full implementation of the new terms of reference for both the South Africa and El Salvador committees are scheduled to take effect after Council grants approval at its September 29th meeting.

Drivers say no go

by Mike Ungar

The Brotherhood of Bus Drivers, Metro Operators and Connected Services of the MUCTC has rejected the transport commission's latest contract offer. Albert Prevost, treasurer for the Driver's Union said last week that union negotiators "were close but close only" to a contract settlement.

The MUCTC is offering salary increases of 7% in the first year and 6% the following year with indexation if the annual inflation rate is above 10%. Drivers now earn $10.51 an hour.

However, union representatives say they want full indexation. Prevost believes the current recession will keep the inflation rate under 10% so drivers will receive no indexation.

The union would also have had to agree to negotiations over the use of part-time workers. The MUCTC had originally wanted to reach an agreement on the use of part-time drivers for the new contract. The drivers though, have refused to discuss the possible use of part-time drivers because they disagree in principle with the proposal.

A vote on the latest contract offer will be held tonight. If the union refuses the proposed contract and strikes, the Québec government is expected to legislate the members back to work. The government has threatened to impose a contract settlement of 6% in the first year and 5% in the second without indexation, if the drivers don't accept the MUCTC offer.

Yvon Bourget, a member of the negotiating committee for the Maintenance Worker's Union says his union, has also

Ghetto fraternity gets fried

by Bettina Karpel

A fire in the Phi Delta Theta Fraternity on University St. destroyed the ground floor of the house and left five students homeless this past Friday.

The five lost all their possessions in the blaze while the belongings of eleven other residents sustained smoke damage.

Eleven fire trucks were called to the scene and damage was estimated at $15,000. There was one and a half feet of water covering the ground floor of the house after the trucks left.

The fire broke out at 5 a.m. in a storage room, where storage space is rented to both fraternity members and non-members. Residents were alerted by smoke alarms and escaped unharmed. One student, however, was forced to escape through his window.

The cause of the fire is still unknown, although arson is suspected. According to Richard Pinnock, a senior frat member, there is suspicion of breaking and entering. There were no electrical appliances which could have malfunctioned in the room.

The fraternity is worried that it will not be able to deal with the financial claims resulting from the fire. Although the frat house itself is protected, none of the students had personal insurance. The fraternity fears it may be liable for damages to the storage area.

The Queen Elizabeth Hotel housed all sixteen residents free of charge for the weekend. Although McGill Real Estate has already begun reconstruction, living quarters will not be available for some time. Other fraternities have offered to take in some students in the interim.

Scott Clark and Steve Curry, students from Halifax who were staying at the fraternity until their apartment was ready had stored most of their belongings in the storage room.

According to Clark "everything" he owned was burnt: a stereo, a television set, school books, and all his clothing.

Curry said all he had left was "thirty dollars, the clothes I'm wearing now, and tuition fees for this term."

According to Pinnock everything is being done to help the students get back into a normal life. A benefit party this Saturday with cheap beer, entertainment, prizes and "lots of fun", says Pinnock is expected to raise money to help compensate student losses.

MUCTC won't pay...

At the root of the public transit labour problems, Prevost believes, is the way in which Lawrence Hannigan (Chairman of the MUCTC) is trying to make a profit from a company which is a public service.

"Mr. Hannigan has been there for ten years. They really don't want to negotiate seriously. They're not a company that makes profit. If we strike they're glad because they probably save a few million dollars."

Labour relations between the driver's union and the MUCTC have been turbulent for several years. The drivers say their working conditions are outdated. The maximum number of hours a driver may work each day is 13 compared with other regional transit commissions which set an 11 hour ceiling. As well, drivers receive no sched-

ed breaks. Prevost said things haven't changed or improved since 1950.

As in previous years, this latest contract is scheduled to end during the winter months. The union had originally agreed to the winter termination but there has recently been controversy over the issue. Some drivers believe that a winter strike is more effective while others feel it only increases public resentment for the drivers.

"Most of the time it was the garage workers who went on strike and we couldn't work and we were blamed all the time," Prevost explained.

Bouget also feels relations between his union and the MUCTC are extremely bad. The MUCTC is trying to turn the public against the union, he said.

"People feel what we are asking for is right. It's not very much. Maybe they understand our demands are legitimate but the public doesn't want us to go on strike to get it. However, the MUCTC doesn't want to negotiate."

been without a contract since January 14. As of yet the MUCTC has made no monetary offer to the union though all other contract issues are settled.

Bouget says the MUCTC has made it clear they will not give "one more cent" in pay. The union's previous contract includes cost of living indexation. The new contract would replace that with an offer of indexation only after inflation reaches 10%.

"That's not enough" says Bourget. "As far as we're concerned that's nothing."

Should a strike take place there is controversy over what services will be provided by the MUCTC workers. Government legislation requires that workers provide essential services in the case of a strike.

The Driver's Union has offered to work 6 hours a day during a strike. They would provide full service for two hours during the morning and afternoon rush hours and an additional two hours late at night.

The MUCTC wants the drivers to work 8 hours in two 4 hour shifts. No agreement has been reached between the two parties although 6 hours of service was provided by the drivers during last month's strike.

Meanwhile, the maintenance workers have refused to provide any essential services. Bourget, who is a shop steward, says that buses and metros cannot be kept in working order unless they are serviced full-time.

"We don't even want to discuss the problem. If we agree to discussions it will show we accept the principle of essential services. It's dangerous for the public."

Take back the night

by Suzy Goldenberg

"It was wonderful to be able to walk in Parc LaFontaine without being scared," said McGill Women's Union member, Liz Harper after last Friday's Take Back the Night demonstration.

Le mouvement contre le viol, the organizers of the march, estimated that 2700 women joined together to walk alone at night, without fear. Some of the demonstrators' rallying cries included, "Solidarité dans le parc" and "Libertés de prendre la rue."

The mood of the march was "celebratory", one of solidarity. Although men were not permitted to take part in the evening's activities, most of the male onlookers were curious rather than hostile about their exclusion from the event.

"There were people in balconies, both men and women and women with babies in their arms, waving at us as we walked," said Dolores Vader, president of the Women's Union.

In fact, said Vader, the demonstration ran smoothly with very few problems.

The march concluded in Parc LaFontaine with songs and speeches. Those women who had not carried candles during the walk lit up while they were standing in the park.

About 400 women attended the party that followed the demonstration. The wine, dancing and feminist music lasted until 2:30 a.m.

The McGill Women's Union was one of the largest groups at the march, according to Harper, with many of the women serving as peace-keepers.

Foreign students pay double this year for Blue Cross Health Insurance

by Adam Kravitz

The price of health coverage for non-Canadian students at McGill has more than doubled. Health insurance for foreign students has risen from $138 last year to $311 this year.

Because they are not covered by Québec Medicare, it has been McGill policy to enroll its 2,800 non-Canadian students in a mandatory group health insurance plan. For the third year in a row, the insurer will be Québec Blue Cross.

According to the University administration the massive premium increase is due to the doubling of Québec hospital rates for non-Canadians as of April 1, 1982. As well, they state that there has been a substantial rise in the number of claims placed by foreign McGill students during the past year.

McGill justifies its choice of Québec Blue Cross (which bears no relation to the American Blue Cross/Blue Shield system) on the basis that it was chosen through sealed competitive bids. The administration sent descriptions of the type of coverage it wanted to twelve insurance companies in the United States and Canada.

Only five companies returned bids after being contacted. One, Sun Life of Canada, dropped out of the bidding after it heard of the hospital rate increase.

The remaining four (and their bids) were: Prudential USA ($511 for single students/$1,003 for married); Des Jardins, out of Lévis, PQ, ($322/$645); the former insurer, University Health and Accident + Life (a two tier system, $360/$720 for post-doctorate students, $267/$534 for the rest); and Québec Blue Cross ($322/$644).

A second round of open bidding was then allowed, but only Blue Cross took advantage, dropping its premiums $10 to their present level.

However, the bids weren't the only criteria taken into consideration. While University

H&A + L put in a much lower bid (for regular students) than Blue Cross, the administration was wary of using them. McGill had several bad experiences with them when they carried the health plan during the 1970's.

Students often found University H&A + L quite reluctant to pay out claims. Many were forced to pay for medical expenses out of their own pocket and then pin down University H&A + L later. In addition, the company was based in Toronto, which not only complicated paperwork, but made the pinning down very expensive if one

Druggies beware

MONTREAL (CUP) — Suspicious-looking people at Concordia University are under surveillance.

That's according to Concordia's security chief Roland Barnabe, who says the university is stepping up ID checks to curtail drug trafficking in campus buildings.

Barnabe says the guards are looking for "suspicious people".

"As long as there is nothing suspicious about your movements and you aren't doing anything wrong, chances are you won't be asked for your ID," he added.

According to university regulation, any student caught without a card can be asked to leave the building. A student who leaves their card in a locker will be escorted back to get it.

And those unlucky enough to leave their card at home can stay at school only if a responsible person, "like a professor", can vouch for their presence at the university, said Barnabe.

Security staff is being doubled for the crackdown.

Society notes:

SS muddles through

The McGill University Students' Society Council welcomed the new year in a muddled fashion with their first meeting of the semester, last Wednesday evening.

Of nearly 30 students elected to Council, only 16 attended the meeting. Though councillors continuously buzzed in and out of the room, voting quorum was somehow maintained throughout the meeting ("We're still quorate so long as nobody challenges it" commented Bruce Hicks, Students' Society Vice President Internal Affairs).

Many reports to council were passed without comment or question. Only a few councillors were interested in changing or amending any of the Executive Committee's actions. The Executive Committee, consisting of the Society's President, Vice Presidents Internal Affairs, External Affairs, Finance and University Affairs, made numerous decisions over the summer:

- Society's President Bruce Williams reported that Stud Soc had decided to impose a new structure on the El Salvador and South Africa committees, transforming them from open committees into fixed voting membership bodies with representation from faculty Presidents, Students' Council and the Executive Committee. "To put it bluntly," said Vice President External Affairs Benji Trister, "we've been having some problems with the South Africa Committee (SAC) in particular." Allusion was made to political stands being taken by these committees without due consideration for Council's positions.

When questioned, Trister was unable to substantiate his allusions.

- Before their terms of office began last April, Council was aware of the Executive Committee's plan to lobby against the Senate passage of the Student Initiated Referenda (SIR). Senate refused to ratify the SIR because the proposal did not include Senate's right to veto student-approved referenda. A new proposal, giving Senate its power to veto, has been included in a committee established to rewrite the Society's constitution. The whole package will be presented for campus-wide passage this fall. That time frame may be idealistic, however, since the present constitution took over a year and half to write.

- Council ratified the decision to hire a new full-time Vending Machine Manager who will oversee Students' Council vending operations throughout the university. Two councillors expressed students' opposition to expanding and spending money on more employees in a time of Society budget cuts.
- Council also decided to publish the McGill Tribune, its newsletter, once a week this year. Last year the newsletter was slated to appear once every two weeks. Representatives debated on the newsletter's cost. Hicks said the Tribune cost $10,000 last year and would cost $15,000 this year. The cost will not double, he said, although the newsletter will appear twice as often as last year. Hicks claimed that "advertising revenue will cover it," but later contradicted himself by saying "we'll get at that later — where the revenue will come from."

- The highpoint of the evening came with the debate on office allocations. The Joint Management Committee presented its list of room allocations for clubs in the University Centre to Council for ratification. A number of councillors reacted strongly to the fact that Access McGill, a group formed last year by the Dean of Students to fight for handicapped students' rights on campus, had been given an office on the very inaccessible fourth floor of the building. Councillors referred to the decision as an "insult". Hicks retorted that most of the organisers of Access were not in wheelchairs, and that since the group was a Student Services group rather than Student Society group it had a low priority in the building. It was proposed that the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society offices in the basement be swapped with Access, since the basement has a separate entrance.

The first vote was called 5-4 in favour of moving the offices. The four people voting against were all members of the Students Society executive committee. A re-vote was called and counted as 5 to 5, at which point Stephen Mathews, Speaker of Council, cast a deciding vote in favour of the change, making it 6-5.

When the smoke cleared, 45 minutes of squabbling had passed and the number of councillors present had declined. Council confusedly decided that the decision's implementation would be postponed until the next Council meeting.

Carnage in Lebanon

Every major government responded with diplomatic expressions of "shock" and "outrage". All the military powers present were either not commenting, or unable to, claiming they knew nothing of the incident. In effect they were silent.

On Saturday, against the crumbling shell-shattered walls of a Palestinian refugee camp, several hundred civilians were rounded up and shot. "Apparently", the major press wire services report, they died as result of machine gun-fire coming from "Lebanese Christian militiamen given control of the camp, Friday, by Israeli occupation forces." They were overtaken by Christian Phalangists with Israeli guns. The International Red Cross in Geneva said "hundreds of women, children, adolescents and old men" were killed. Several war correspondants cried while they phoned in their stories.

Israel stands as an accomplice, not yet accused, while the world draws in its breath. The guilt hangs over the Chatilla and Sabra refugee camps as the stench of hundred of rotting bodies rises from hastily covered pits.

But Israeli soldiers stationed across the street deny hearing anything; not the sounds of people about to die, nor continued bursts of machine guns less than a hundred yards away. One of the soldiers, a colonel, told a reporter; "I don't know anything, I can't say anything. I know nothing about this." Meanwhile a bulldozer scrapes a body off the ground.

Earlier last week, the refugees were streaming back to the camps after hearing that a ceasefire had been signed. They thought they would be safe. Reporters say the night of the massacre, the Israeli soldiers were shooting off flares into the dark above Chatilla.

Israel, "a light unto the nations," stood in the shadows: behind-the-scenes technicians. Ideologically, the incursions into Lebanon could be explained. After this, Israel can only be damned.

With the PLO gone, Israel justified its reoccupation of West Beirut after Christian president-elect Gemayel's assassination as a means of restoring peace. They claimed they were trying to avoid clashes between Christian militia (Phalangists) and PLO supported Moslems. With the PLO gone, the refugee camps were unprotected — Israel let the enemy in.

The United States-backed UN censure motion leaves Israel more isolated than ever. Even though Americans were forgiving of past Israeli atrocities, Israel has entered a new era of solitude.

But this isn't just a falling-out between political allies. Begin and the Israeli war machine have wiped out innocents, leaving behind a tattered Lebanon and a tainted nation.

The statistics are not in Israel's favour. This Saturday's death toll, estimated to be close to a thousand, turns the "an eye for an eye" numbers game into an absurd Israeli rampage. Begin rebutted American cease-fire demands, saying "Israel bows to no one but god". He has lowered his country to shame.

There will still be violent conflict between Palestine and Israel. Begin especially should know that there can never be "a war to end all wars."

The Israeli army's chief of staff, Lt. General Rafael Eytan, was half-wrong as he coolly described the re-occupation of West Beirut. "What has to be destroyed, we will destroy and who has to be arrested will be arrested."

The struggle with Palestinians has not been arrested, a thousand people have been destroyed.

Montréal obsolete

Montréal is outdated.

Many of the city's manufacturing industries are quite unmodern. Many would be extinct if it were not for protective trade tariffs. Many will and probably should disappear. The textile, footwear, and furniture industries, among others, are important to Montréal because they provide a large number of jobs. However the cost of supporting them through protective tariffs and direct government subsidies is becoming untenable given the perilous state of government finances and the imperiled state of the taxpayer.

We cannot however simply shut down these dying industries. A lengthy transition period involving rebuilding factories or building brand new ones, retraining some parts of the labour force, and creating suitable municipal infrastructures will have to take place.

Obviously a major industrial redevelopment plan cannot be implemented by the civic government alone. However Montréalers should expect that their city government, and in particular their mayor, take the lead in ushering Montréal into the modern age.

Given that an election campaign is now underway to elect a mayor and 57 municipal councillors it only seems intelligent to expect that industrial redevelopment, and especially the form it should take, would be an important campaign issue.

This has not been the case to date.

Vague plans about science parks, advertising campaigns, and other such flotsam are not going to employ the thousands of Montréalers who are already unemployed and the thousands more who may soon be.

The future of a city is at stake. Montréal should not become obsolete.

What you can do for us

Since this is the beginning of a new year, when many of our readers are new, it seems appropriate to explain our policy on letters and Hyde Park columns.

We are committed to publishing all correspondence that we receive from students with certain provisos. We require that letters be kept to approximately 300 words in length and that they be typed legibly so that we can read them to typeset them. We cannot publish material which is libelous or slanderous, and we have a policy of refusing to publish 'hate literature' — anything which is racist or sexist in content. There is a box right by the door in the Daily offices (Room B03, University Centre) for letters submissions.

We also have a regular feature called Hyde Park which is printed in this column, underneath the editorial cartoon. Hyde Park is a column for editorial comment by people who are not staff members of the newspaper; you can use Hyde Park to comment on any issue you feel demands it, even to denounce the newspaper if you wish. We have the same policy with Hyde Parks as we do with letters. The length limit, however, is longer, at 600 words.

Participation of our readers in the paper is an essential ingredient of the Daily. Your feedback, opinions and ideas all have a guaranteed place in the newspaper and it's up to you to use that space.

Urban notes: Of budgets, candidates and things

In two months Montréalers will be heading to the polls to elect the city's next government. Our three municipal political parties are finally, after much hemming and hawing, off and running. The two opposition parties have selected their candidates for the mayoralty, Jean Doré is running for the Montréal Citizen's Movement, Henri-Paul Vignola is doing the honours for the Municipal Action Group. And everyone is waiting with baited breath for at least a hint of a whisper of a clue of Jean Drapeau's intentions.

The Civic Party will try to beat the opposition parties to the budgetary punch this year. Complaining that during the 1978 elections opposition candidates "were pulling numbers out of the air", Executive Committee Chairman Yvon Lamarre surprised onlookers at a press conference last Thursday with the announcement that the city budget would be released about two weeks before election day (November 14).

The Drapeau administration has almost invariably released the annual city budget at the end of November and has always kept the budget a secret until its release.

Lamarre said that single-family dwelling owners may be in for a pleasant surprise, hinting that their taxes may be frozen at this year's level. Lamarre also said that the budget would "respect the spirit" of the federal government's six-and-five restraint program.

Spirit indeed. Increases in spending may be kept at the six per cent level in the upcoming year but the city is going to be hard-pressed to find enough money in its budget to pay its employees. Montréal's blue collar employees were recently awarded a 33% salary increase over three years with a cost-of-living adjustment for the final two years of their contract. It is not particularly surprising that the blue-collar union did well in this election year. The Drapeau-Lamarre administration only took its lead from past provincial governments. Avoiding labour strife during an election campaign is part of the code of honour of incumbent governments in Québec.

The budget which will be presented to the public is not the final budget. The actual budget does not have to be completed and passed by the city council until January 15. This means that the budget is really not much more than a Civic Party election ploy. As the last meeting of the current council is tonight, the Drapeau-Lamarre budget will not be an official budget until the newly elected city council, if they should so choose, approves it. This also means that the budget can be changed between the time of its public pre-election unveiling and its implementation.

The clue to where the money is going to come from for wage increases of well over 6% (to be fair to the blue-collar workers city hall management employees are not going to suffer either) and a tax freeze for single-family home owners was in another of Lamarre's comments.

According to Mayor Drapeau's right-hand man the city should be able to cut back on funds for culture and recreation as residents' needs are already being "adequately served" by the present infrastructure.

The rest of the money will probably come from tax increases for the city's apartment and commercial buildings. These increases will invariably be passed on to tenants and consumers. This budget sleight-of-hand is perhaps an indication that the Drapeau-Lamarre administration is taking the opposition seriously in this election.

However if the Civic Party can convince the voters that the Olympics crisis period is over and the city is back on a sound financial footing than at least half their election fight is won. And besides, if there is some kind of arithmetic mistake in the proposed budget there is still time after the election to correct any errors.

There are recurrent rumours circulating that Mayor Drapeau is going to use tonight's council meeting to make his grand entrance and return to the throne. He will also allegedly announce that he will run again for mayor.

A report in Saturday's La Presse quotes various sources, as being alternately certain that he will preside at the council meeting, that he won't, and that he might not attend the council meeting but that he will announce his candidacy for mayor shortly.

Henri-Paul Vignola is not impressed with Yvon Lamarre's budget magic. The Municipal Action Group's (MAG) candidate for mayor said that voters should not take the budget seriously as it is being released only two weeks before election day.

Vignola is unimpressed with Drapeau's past record on taxes and said that the city has now obligated itself to giving all its other employees increases similar to the raises granted to the blue-collar workers. Vignola points out that salaries and fringe benefits account for close to 40% of the city's budget.

Vignola also said that MAG will be presenting its solutions to the city's budgetary problems at its October 2nd convention. MAG will be proposing some form of variable tax rate to give small property owners some relief from the proportionally higher taxes which most pay. The Montréal Citizen's movement has also made a variable tax rate part of its election platform.

— G. Pierre Goad

The Montréal Citizen's Movement (MCM) chose candidates for the Snowdon/Côtes des Neiges area in districts 51, 52 and 54 on Tuesday, September 14. Districts 50 and 53 had already nominated candidates in the same area.

Howard Freed was chosen over David Fox in District 54, the only contested nomination. André Malouf and Hubert Simard were acclaimed in districts 51 and 52, respectively. Marvin Rotrand, nominated two weeks ago in district 50, and Yves Melançon chosen last May in district 53 complete the slate in this area of the city.

About 70 people attended the meeting but only 25 were eligible to vote in the contested nomination. The results of the vote were not announced.

André Malouf (Albert Malouf was the Judge of the Malouf inquiry - they are distantly related) is an independant researcher and has been involved with progressive groups, including Greenpeace and the MCM, since 1977. Malouf stressed the importance of the MCM's grassroots initiatives on the issues of tenants rights (Bill 57) and the reinstatement of the 65 bus route. He said he will concentrate on a door to door campaign.

Hubert Simard has been very active in the MCM, having run in the two previous civic elections and organized the Wilderton Park petition. He bemoaned the Drapeau administration's disregard for the 5000 people who signed the petition against the Wilderton Park development, stating that his priorities would be construction of housing for the aged and the conservation of green spaces in his district.

According to Freed, the sparsely populated district 54 (only 25 per cent of the district is residential), is replete with typical MCM issues. Freed, who is blind, called for greater pedestrian access across the Decarie expressway and improved sidewalk clearance for the elderly and the handicapped in the winter.

Doré Speaks

The MCM's candidate for mayor, Jean Doré, roused the partisan crowd with a brief speech touching on the well-canvassed major issues of the campaign: housing; Civic Party 'democracy'; and unemployment. When asked about student housing by The Daily, Doré said that renovations done by the city have focused on the wealthy and have contributed to the demise of low-income housing for students, the elderly, and others on low- or fixed-incomes. "Only one half of one per cent of this year's city budget (around six million dollars) has been spent on low-income housing by this administration."

Doré related student job concerns to the general problem of high unemployment in Montréal. According to Doré, unemployment has doubled in the last six years. Doré said the MCM would institute job programs in conjunction with the federal and provincial governments, something the Drapeau administration has not condescended to do.

Pointing out that Montréal has the highest number of dilapidated homes in Canada (100,000 - 25 per cent of the total in Canada), Doré said that this is an area he would focus upon as mayor of Montréal.

When asked about the MCM's chances of winning the election, Doré said that the Civic Party's popularity has declined. According to Doré, Drapeau's party has 17 percent less voter support and 19 percent less voter satisfaction than it had four years ago. He described the Civic Party as a private political club and MAG (Municipal Action Group) as "a party of stars". According to Doré both these parties rely on 'private' donations while the MCM relies on 'public' donations. Doré also said that the MCM has a broader base of public support than the other parties. The MCM has three thousand members.

Doré also indicated that if defeated as mayor he would not drop out of the opposition and public view as did Duquette in the 1978 election. Doré said that he would be running as co-candidate in district 27 so that if defeated in the mayoralty race he would take a seat in opposition, providing the MCM wins district 27. "That way I will be a strong voice in opposition until we win in 1986", said Doré.

Extra bite in Ontario cafeterias

TORONTO (CUP) — Provincial finance minister Frank Miller's 1982 budget has hit Ontario students and university with his own seven per cent solution.

As a result of cuts in federal transfer payments, the provincial government has extended its seven per cent tax base to all prepared foods and meals.

For the government this means an extra $110 million in revenue and for the students, a seven per cent tax on all cafeteria meals.

The tax, announced May 14, originally applied to all residence meal plans and research equipment purchases. But these two items were exempted after strong protests from provincial student groups and university administrators.

At the University of Ottawa, the new tax laws were originally calculated to add $1 million to last year's equipment purchase of $15 million.

However, even with some government concessions, students will still continue to suffer under the new tax, according to Canadian Federation of Students-Ontario chair, Helena Mitchell.

Hey, like wow! It's the sixties, man. Let's drop some acid and freak out in Gertrude's

Unemployed biding time in universities

OTTAWA (CUP) — Just as campus administrators began to worry about declining enrolment, along came the tail end of the baby boom and the Summer of Unemployment.

Recoiling from the worst job market in 45 years, Canadian students have enrolled in courses this fall in record numbers.

Statistics Canada predicts that full-time university and college enrolment will reach 693,000, up 19,000 from 1981-82. Including part-time students, more than one million Canadians now attend post-secondary institutions.

The startling story coming out of this fall's registration is the reversal of the usual enrolment pattern: for the first time in years, university enrolment has increased faster than college enrolment.

Full-time university enrolment will be 414,000, up 3.2 per cent from 1981-82, according to Statistics Canada. Full-time college enrolment is expected to reach 279,000, up almost two per cent.

Zoltan Zsigmond, a Statistics Canada researcher, said university enrolment is increasing faster because people with university degrees are weathering the recession much better than people with college diplomas. And both groups are more likely to find a job than less educated people.

Overall unemployment for 15 to 24 year-olds jumped from 11.8 per cent in July 1981 to 19.6 per cent a year later. But among people in the same age group with a university degree it only rose from 6.8 to 10 per cent. For 15 to 24 year-olds with a college diploma, unemployment rose much more rapidly in the same period, from 5.7 to 13.6 per cent.

"With more education it is easier to find a job," said Zsigmond. "But this does not mean that all those with a diploma or degree will find an appropriate job according to their education."

Zsigmond said the better educated are pushing the less educated out of work in the scramble for a diminishing number of jobs. Youth unemployment rates are dramatically higher among less educated groups. In July, a staggering 34 per cent of 15 to 24 year-olds with a grade eight or less education were unemployed.

Zsigmond said that during a recession more people upgrade their education to increase their job prospects.

He said the proportion of people attending Alberta universities declined during the economic boom there because well-paying jobs were available to people holding only bachelor's degrees.

With the collapse of the boom, more Albertans are staying on at university to get a master's degree, even in programs like commerce and engineering.

A smaller factor in this year's enrolment increase was the movement of the tail end of the baby boom through post-secondary institutions, said Zsigmond.

Many people have the mistaken impression that the baby boom has already passed through the 18 to 24 age bracket, but the largest number of births in Canadian history was in 1959.

The birth rate went into a steep decline in the early 1960's, so enrolment should presumably start to fall after 1982-83. But Zsigmond said the state of the economy and the availability of student aid will be major determinants of next year's enrolment.

He said that post-secondary education is much more affordable now than it was in the last period of very high unemployment, the 1930s. Because of this, today's students are more likely to remain in school longer, he said.

"God help us if unemployment stays this high next year," said Zsigmond. "But if it does, and if it is not really a big financial burden for most students to stay in school, they will stay in school."

So the long-awaited enrolment decline remains. But the unemployment crisis will only postpone the decline for a year or two, said Zsigmond.

"By 1985 for sure."

Gay speakers turned away

MONTREAL (CUP) — The Quebec Human Rights Commission will investigate a high school principal's refusal to allow a gay and lesbian rights group to make a presentation to his students.

The Lesbian and Gay Friends of Concordia are charging discrimination on the basis of their sexual orientation, a violation of Quebec's human rights code. Neither Canada's new Charter of Rights and Freedoms nor any other province's human rights code prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.

Last April, several grade 11 students at Wagar High School invited the group to make a presentation on homosexuality. De Groot refused to permit the lecture, claiming the students' parents would disapprove.

Students working on the project circulated a petition among the parents of students in the class to reinstate the lecturers. All the parents signed. De Groot refused to respect the petition.

Unable to address the class, a few members of the Gay Friends agreed to give a private lecture to three members of the class who then represented the material in their project.

Jon Wolfe, the co-ordinator of Lesbian and Gay Friends, said they initiated the investigation to publicize the issue.

"Students should have the right to invite anyone of their choice without any interference," said Wolfe.

It may be several months before the case is concluded. According to Gisele Cloutier of the commission, a backlog of cases and lack of personnel have slowed proceedings at the investigation department.

De Groot declined to comment on the investigation.

And yet another sixties revival. God, I wish I was dead. I can't get no satisfaction — why am I still alive?

Never too far away for the CIA

WINNIPEG (CUP) — The American Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) is actively conducting surveillance in Canada, according to a former CIA and U.S. Air Force Intelligence agent.

Peter James recently told several hundred people at the University of Manitoba that instances of CIA activity in Canada included:

- the infiltration and control of Canadian publishing houses;
- the surveillance of Canadian citizens;
- numerous informants (journalist, professors, and politicians) on its payroll
- the infiltration and control of many companies, including insurance companies, which collect "a great deal of personal data";

- the exploitation of Canadian resources and experts through theft and information

James was a graduate from the Case Institute of Technology, a former rocket engineer, and an agent for the CIA and Air Force Intelligence from 1965 to 1971. He questioned the role of American intelligence agencies in Canada.

The problems with University H&A+L were not isolated incidents either. Both the Government of Canada Award winners and World University Canada Service students asked to be included in the present McGill Blue Cross plan because they had also had similar complaints with University H&A+L.

Québec Blue Cross, however, has kept up a very good record. Last year, the administration received only one complaint out of 5014 claims. Also Blue Cross, a Montréal based company, seems to be concerned about its reputation and regularly sends a representative over to McGill in order to make sure everything is running smoothly and to ask for suggestions.

The main cause of the premium hike was undoubtedly the meteoric increase of Québec hospital rates. Unfortunately for foreign students, it proved to be a situation that neither McGill or Blue Cross could control.

Manthos not a myth

by Mel Timmy

One side of a telephone conversation, in Canada, sometime in August, somewhere in the world of college sports.

"Did you hear who we've recruited for this year's season?"

"No?...the guy's the greatest. He's a three sport all-American!"

"What sports?...Hockey, football, and basketball, the big three."

"Where's he from?...The States, where else?"

"Where in the States? They say New York."

"Look if he's from the States he's gotta be good. I tell ya they've just about compared him to Superman. The arm of a Joe Namath, the moves of a Wayne Gretzky, and the legs of a Dr. J."

"What's his name?... I couldn't tell you, but they're sure he's coming. He's written the athletics department and assures them he'll be here for the fall semester."

"You're not kidding, the guy's gonna make the difference. If he is what they say he is then how can we miss?"

"I know, I know, but this time it's different. They're positive he's coming."

How many times have we heard this story. The old you should hear who we're getting next year story. The Messiah! He rarely shows. Instead, what does show up, 9 times out of 10, is an athlete that only plays one sport. If he plays football, he has an arm like Jughead's. If he plays hockey, he has moves like Chris Nilan. And if it's basketball, he has legs like Little Lota.

What he is is a regular homo sapien, just like the rest of us.

But, this year is different, it really is. This year we have Manthos.

Yes McGill sportsfans, the Redmen Basketball program has finally landed its dream recruit, Greece's own Manthos Katsoulis. At 26 years of age Manthos, in Greece, has played six years of semi-pro basketball, has been the leading scorer on his club team, fifth leading scorer in the country, and a starter on the country's national team.

This year will truly be different. This year there can't be any excuses.

And by the way, Manthos is six feet nine inches tall, and weighs in at approximately 230 pounds. And any rebounds that come within his arms length he owns.

Honest, I've seen him with my own eyes.

Ralph Nader tackles U of T

TORONTO (CUP) — Ralph Nader, the well-known American consumer advocate, has accused the University of Toronto administration of playing dirty politics.

An administrative committee recently refused the Ontario Public Interest Research Group's request that the university its $5 per student levy.

Public Interest Research Groups are democratically organized student groups that conduct research into environmental, health and consumer issues. Nader has helped create dozens of these groups on North American campuses.

Nader charged that the decision made by the Governing Council's Campus and Community Affairs Committee (CCA) was "intolerably repressive." He also charged that Ontario Hydro officials may have influenced the committee's decision.

OPIRG plans to hold a public forum on acid rain this month and will co-sponsor a lecture by the controversial alternative energy advocate Amory Lovins.

But CCA chair Joyce Forster denied Nader's charges that Ontario Hydro had any influence on the decision. "(It's) patently and totally absurd," she said adding that only the university administration OPIRG and the graduate student union contacted committee members about the issue.

Forster said the committee refused to collect the fund because it is not a student government even though the referendum establishing the OPIRG was passed by 65 per cent last spring.

Campus groups are not entitled to collect fees (an exception was recently made for the Varsity, the student newspaper, because they would "nickel and dime students to death," said Forster.)

OPIRG spokesperson Lisa

Dunn said she was concerned about the danger to students' rights that the committee's decision raises. "Mrs. Forster claimed in the April 20 meeting that CCA was not bound by the results of any student referendum."

Dunn said OPIRG will ask the Graduate Student Union to collect the fee for them.

McGill Program Board

We're looking for Engineering and Computing Science graduates who want to develop their resources.

And ours.

Syncrude Canada Ltd. is one of the world's largest and most advanced synthetic fuel producers. And we've barely scratched the surface at current production of 129,000 barrels per day.

Offer us your energy for ours, and we'll offer you participatory management. Which means if you've got something to say, you'll get the chance to say it. Just like our more experienced voices. It's a good change to get farther, faster.

We also encourage continuing education, with more than 400 courses of professional interest. In addition to all the courses you can take just for fun.

And when it's time to relax, you'll find McMurray is a dynamic city, with all sorts of pursuits to interest you. First run theatres, first class fishing, a fine recreation centre, and a lot of nice people to sport with.

There's something else to keep in mind. The chance to really stretch your mind. We're constantly tackling new things. And you could be the one to make technological history. Things you develop today, could be used by industry professionals for all time. If this appeals to you, complete an application for either permanent or summer employment through your placement office.

Application Deadline October 21, 1982
